The Office of the Auditor-General began its three-day Annual Plan and Strategic Plan Review and Development Workshop today, March 17, 2025. The event, held in the OAG Auditorium, was officially opened by Deputy Auditor-General, Mr. Goms Menettè, who underscored the workshop's significance as a platform for reflection and strategic planning.

In his opening remarks, Mr. Menettè highlighted the critical role the office plays in promoting accountability, transparency, and good governance across the country. "Our role as the supreme public auditors is not only to ensure financial prudence but to foster trust, integrity, and efficiency in public service delivery," he stated, emphasizing the office's commitment to these principles.

This year's workshop is aligned with the theme set forth by the President in his New Year's address on December 31, 2024: "The need to work effectively and persistently for the benefit of our citizens and our country." Mr. Menettè reminded participants that each audit conducted and every report produced must translate into real improvements in the daily lives of Namibians.

The workshop aims to enable auditors and staff of the Auditor-General's Office to refine their strategies and plans for 2025 to better serve the public. With discussions set to span various topics related to audit effectiveness and public sector integrity, the event seeks to equip the participants with the necessary tools to uphold their mandate.

Concluding his remarks, Mr. Menettè called on all attendees to engage actively in the discussions that will take place over the next three days. The workshop is expected to conclude on Wednesday, March 19, 2025, setting the stage for a focused and effective year ahead for the Auditor-General's Office.
